Pol apologizes for threat to reporter

Sorry. New York Rep. Michael Grimm threatened to throw a NY1 reporter off a balcony.

A Staten Island congressman apologized for threatening an NY1 reporter with physical harm after the State of the Union address.

Rep. Michael Grimm called NY1 reporter Michael Scotto on Wednesday and said he "overreacted," the news organization reported.

The apology came after Scotto tried to ask Grimm about an ongoing federal investigation into his campaign fundraising following an interview about the president's address.

Grimm wouldn't let him finish the question during a live interview, then later threatened to throw the reporter off a balcony, according to footage from NY1.

"No, no, you're not man enough, you're not man enough. I'll break you in half. Like a boy," Grimm also said.

After calling Scotto, Grimm told reporters later Wednesday, "I was wrong, it shouldn't have happened. ... I lost my cool."

"I think my constituents know that I'm extremely passionate about them," Grimm said. "They expect Michael Grimm to

Investigation

Grimm threatened the reporter for mentioning an investigation into his campaign finances.

- Grimm is the subject of a two-year federal investigation into alleged campaign finance violations during his 2010 congressional bid.

- Fundraiser Diana Durand was accused this month of illegally funneling more than $10,000 into the campaign.
- Grimm has not been charged and denies any wrongdoing.

Grimm said he had not been drinking alcohol before the interview.

In a statement after the incident, Grimm said he was "extremely annoyed" that Scotto asked an off-topic question, accusing the reporter of taking a "disrespectful and cheap shot."

Driver flees cops after traffic stop, draws fire

A minor traffic infraction snowballed into a car chase, the discharging of police firearms and a long list of criminal charges for a Bronx driver who failed to yield to a pedestrian on Tuesday, police said.

Jason Henry, 39, was pulled over at around 5 p.m. by officers who were part of a routine pedestrian safety detail monitoring traffic at Morris Park Avenue and White Plains Road.

But as the cops approached his vehicle, Henry took off.

During the chase, Henry struck a parked car, drove up onto a sidewalk, elicited fire by driving directly at police officers and finally crashed into a telephone pole.

Henry was taken into police custody without further incident. One hundred Oxycodone pills were found inside the vehicle after his arrest, causing "criminal possession of narcotics" to be added to a list of 14 charges. EMILY JOHNSON

Two men dead in Manhattan fires

Both of the blazes happened early on Wednesday. / GETTY IMAGES

Two men are dead and a third person is critically injured after two separate fires broke out in the side-by-side neighborhoods of Harlem and East Harlem early on Wednesday, police said.

Firefighters responded around 12:40 a.m. to the first fire, which was blazing in a Taft Houses apartment on Fifth Avenue in East Harlem. When they arrived, the firefighters found a 48-year-old man unconscious and unresponsive inside of the kitchen. He was later pronounced dead at Mount Sinai Hospital.

Later that morning, just after 6 a.m., another fire was reported in a third-floor apartment on Frederick Douglass Boulevard in Harlem. Firefighters raced to the scene to extinguish the blaze.

Two people were taken to Harlem Hospital, one of them a 68-year-old man, who was pronounced dead. The other victim was listed in stable condition.

The fire marshal is investigating the cause of both fires. EMILY JOHNSON

Murder. Man accused of killing two women for being 'witches'

A Queens man was arrested for beating his girlfriend and her 25-year-old daughter to death with a hammer because he thought they were casting spells on him, officials said Wednesday.

Carlos Amarillo, 44, is accused of murdering his girlfriend, Estrella Castaneda, 56, and her daughter Lina Castaneda in their bedrooms and calling 911 to report their deaths, according to Queens District Attorney Richard Brown.

Prosecutors said Amarillo told the 911 operator shortly after midnight Wednesday,

"Two females are dead, they were assassinated, hurry they are dead. I killed them because they are witches, I want the police to kill me. I killed them with a hammer."

When police arrived, Lina Castaneda's 7-year-old daughter was in the apartment Amarillo shared with the victims, but she was unharmed.

Prosecutors said Amarillo said in statements to police that he believed both victims were "performing voodoo and casting spells on him."

Information on an attorney for Amarillo was not immediately available. ANNA SANDERS proposals last year, the last time the Cobble Hill hospital was on the chopping block for redevelopment.

Eligible suitors include NYU Langone Medical Center, which proposed a facility split between condominiums and health care, and the Brooklyn Hospital Center, which put forth a plan for an emergency room flanked by 1,000 apartments. The bidders have only until Feb. 3 to resubmit their proposals.

Elected officials from Brooklyn released a statement blaming SUNY's "failure" for LICH's state of affairs and demanding an open process. The group of eight officials included Congresswoman Nydia Velazquez, state Sen. Daniel Squadron and Public Advocate Letitia James.

On any given day, patrons of the Brooklyn Strategist may crush fantastical armies, master ancient gaming tactics or swap Scrabble tiles.

But at the Cobble Hill game store, cafe and social club, there is one limitation: "No computers in any way," store owner Jon Freeman, 48, said.

The goal of the community-based, hands-on game center is get people to "think, have fun in a healthy and spirited way," Freeman said.

"When you're playing a game with somebody, it literally forces you to be present," he explained.

If you go

"When you're playing a game with somebody, it literally forces you to be present."

Jon Freeman, The Brooklyn Strategist

A clinical psychologist, Freeman used to be a director at a neuroscience research firm in Manhattan. He opened the store January 2011 after "burning out in academia."

Freeman cites a "wealth" of scientific research showing the cognitive benefits of playing strategy games.

Though the shop has classics like Monopoly, clubs focus on "games that require forward-thinking," he said.

The store hosts after-school programs for children, clubs for adults, "Magic: The Gathering" tournaments and "Warhammer" events. Customers can also have their pick of more than 400 games in the shop's library.

Freeman hopes classes for kids — and, really, the adult clubs, too — increase engagement, particularly for those children with learning disabilities. He said there are social and emotional benefits to playing games with other people.

The shop has a dedicated and growing following after just three years. Freeman said he's hoping to open a second location.

But that, like his favorite games in the shop, requires strategy.

"We have to make sure we can afford it first," he said.

Obama pushes minimum wage hike on road trip

Middle-class hero.

Democrats are trying to reinforce Obama's image, against low poll numbers.

President Barack Obama, on a road trip to highlight themes from his State of the Union speech that called for narrowing the gap between the rich and poor, urged Congress on Wednesday to raise the minimum wage for low-income Americans.

"If you work hard, you should be able to pay your rent, buy your groceries, look after your kids," Obama said at a Costco big-box store in this Washington suburb. "If you put in a hard day's work, you deserve decent pay for it."

Flanked by boxes of paper towels and garbage bags, Obama said that

Quoted

"The increase in the minimum wage is a very powerful message. It resonates across the country."

Sen. Ed Markey

in coming weeks he will sign an executive order raising to $10.10 an hour the minimum wage for federal contract workers. But he said Congress must act to raise it for millions of other American workers. The current federal minimum wage is $7.25 an hour.

Obama noted that many state governors have already taken steps to raise the minimum wage in their states.

"While Congress decides whether it's going to raise the minimum wage or not, people outside of Washington are not waiting, and I'm not either," he said.

As part of a symbolic trip the day after his annual State of the Union address, Obama headed for a U.S. Steel plant near Pittsburgh to raise momentum for a proposal to make it easier for Americans to put money away for retirement.

His travel has a political motive. He wants to help Democrats win seats in November's congressional elections by focusing on a popular theme that touches on the economy and income inequality.

WellPoint. Health exchange applicants hit expectations

Health insurer WellPoint Inc. said on Wednesday the applicants for the new Obamacare health plans are of the age and demographics it had expected, indicating that medical costs will not soar beyond the prices it charges.

WellPoint, which released lower fourth-quarter results on Wednesday, said that based on age, insurance plan selection, income levels, gender and available pharmacy data, it believes it has set the right premium rates for these new customers.

Initial enrollment data nationwide has shown that the first wave of people who enrolled are older people who can be more expensive to insure because they often have more health problems than young people.

Shares in WellPoint rose about 3 percent, or $2.75, to $87.05 in morning trading after the comments. Competitor Aetna Inc. shares rose 39 cents to $69.32 while UnitedHealth Group Inc. gained 33 cents to $72.03.

"There was a concern that a lot of the firms that were involved in the exchanges would be underpriced for the demographic that would find the exchanges appealing, at least over the first year," Morningstar analyst Vishnu Lekraj said. REUTERS

Icy chaos gripped the U.S. South on Wednesday after a rare winter storm that killed at least six people, stranded children in their schools overnight and paralyzed travel in several states, including hundreds of flight cancellations at the world's busiest airport. # New Knox verdict puts US credibility on trial

Leaker weakens.

Edward Snowden may have thrown a wrench into the Knox case.

Amanda Knox faces judgment day for the fourth time in six years Thursday, with a Florence court set to deliver its verdict on whether to uphold her conviction for the 2007 murder of British student Meredith Kercher. The American, 26, will hear the outcome remotely, having refused to attend the trial, and she has vowed to become a "fugitive" rather than return to Italy if convicted.

Should the court rule against Knox, she has options beyond life as a runaway. Italy's Supreme Court would have to approve the ruling before extradition proceedings could start, with no guarantee it would be pursued.

But if the case got did that far, legal experts believe Knox would be in trouble. "No standard appeal is available for an extradition," said Christopher L. Blakesley, professor of international law at University of Nevada in Las Vegas. "Her defense might try to argue that the second trial

Amanda Knox, right, acknowledges the cheers of supporters while her mother Edda Mellas comforts her after Knox's return to Seattle after being freed from an Italian prison in October 2011. / GETTY IMAGES

The Snowden engima

The United States' decision not to extradite could be a costly decision in a sensitive climate, believes Ku.

- "In general, the U.S. benefits from these treaties more than their partners, and the general policy is to cooperate where possible. The [Edward] Snowden case could work against Knox — it just highlights that the U.S. needs these treaties, and it will be under pressure to comply."

- If the Florence court rules against Knox, she could pursue a similar route to Snowden and seek asylum in a non-extraditable country. Even if it rules in her favor there may still be a price to pay, as Kercher's family could sue for the profits from her book.

Quoted

"It could become a political question, as she has so much popular support. If the U.S. does not care about its extradition treaty with Italy, it might decide not to turn her over." Ku and appeals violated double jeopardy. This would be problematic as the U.S. understood the nature of the Italian criminal justice system when it entered into the treaty, assuming that it met due process standards."

Unless a clear flaw was shown in the Italian legal system, extradition proceedings could only stop at the State Department level, says Julian Ku, international law specialist at Hofstra University in New York. "It could become a political question as she has so much popular support. If the U.S. does not care about its extradition treaty with Italy, it might decide not to turn her over."

New. Breakthrough in embryonic-like stem cells may be the future

In experiments that could open a new era in stem cell biology, scientists have found a simple way to reprogram mature animal cells back into an embryonic-like state that allows them to generate many types of tissue.

The research suggests human cells could in the future be reprogrammed by the same technique, offering a simpler way to replace damaged cells or grow new organs for sick and injured people.

Chris Mason, chair of regenerative medicine bioprocessing at University College London, who was not involved in the work, said its approach in mice was "the most simple, lowest-cost and quickest method" to generate so-called pluripotent cells — able to develop into many different cell types — from mature cells.

The experiments, reported in two papers

Israeli coalition wobbles as US peace proposal approaches

A pending U.S. framework proposal to propel stumbling Israeli-Palestinian peace talks forward chipped away on Wednesday at a troubled alliance between Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and an ultranationalist ally in his governing coalition.

Adding to the fray was a warning by centrist Finance Minister Yair Lapid that any failure of U.S.-brokered peace talks could cause a "dramatic setback" in Israel's economy, citing boycott threats against Israel already heard in the West.

No date has been announced for Secretary of State John Kerry to unveil his blueprint for an Israeli-Palestinian deal. REUTERS

For truth, justice and the Christian way

Pope Francis may already be a hero to the world's downtrodden but at least one pop artist thinks he's more than that. Move over Superman, it's time for Superpope. A large painting has appeared on a building near the Vatican showing the Argentine pope taking off into the air, his right fist clenched ahead of him in classic Superman style. His white cape and cross flutter in the breeze and in his left hand he carries a black briefcase bearing the word "valores," Spanish for values. A scarf bearing the blue and red colors of his favorite Argentine soccer club, San Lorenzo, emerges from the bag. In the lore of the comic book hero, later a star of radio, television and film, Superman fought a "never-ending battle" for truth and justice. Francis has vowed to eliminate corruption in the Vatican and bring the 1.2 billion-member Catholic Church closer to the poor. The artwork, which has been pasted to the wall, is signed "Maupal 2014." REUTERS /GETTY IMAGES

Russian literary dispute ends in stabbing death

The lesson from a stabbing death in Russia: Alcohol and literature can be a lethal mix.

A former schoolteacher killed his friend after a drunken argument over which is superior, poetry or prose, investigators said. The suspect fled his home in the town of Irbit, where the 67-year-old victim was killed after the argument on Jan. 20, and hid at another friend's house in

Kicking the habit

No smoking in China schools

China has banned smoking in schools, state media reported on Wednesday, the latest step in a government drive to kick the country's pervasive tobacco habit.

Despite years of campaigning by health activists, China is the world's largest consumer of cigarettes and smokers can be spotted everywhere, even in schools and hospitals. REUTERS

In yesterday's Word, writer Melinda Taub alerted you to the fact that Madonna and Miley Cyrus were going to team up for "Miley Cyrus: MTV Unplugged" — and they did! And they look like they need some assistance, no? Here are the two hot messes onstage looking like an acid-dipped Roy Rogers and Dale Evans on Tuesday night in Hollywood. The special premiered last night on MTV.

Dating tips from Michael B. Jordan

Michael B. Jordan doesn't quite prescribe to our Tinder dating culture. The "Fruitvale Station" actor believes it takes a bit of time to decide if you really belong to someone.

"When you first meet somebody, they put their best foot forward most of the time," he told reporters at a recent press conference for the new flick, "That Awkward Moment." "And as you get to know somebody through texts or phone conversations or dates or whatever, you can slowly let that person start to come out. And then you can just use your best judgment."

Right. "Hide the psycho." Check. He also told us that his deal breaker when it comes to romance is, "a girl that doesn't eat."

Fortunately, I am eating right now as I'm writing this, and probably while you are reading it. And probably even after that. I guess what I'm trying to say is: I'm constantly eating. We are perfect for each other!

'That Awkward Moment'

1 Two of last year's bigger breakouts, Michael B. Jordan ("Fruitvale Station") and Miles Teller ("The Spectacular Now"), star in this Zac Efron-led rom-com about guys trying to stay single. Look, we've all got bills to pay.

Is Zac Efron, center, ashamed to be in "That Awkward Moment"? / FOCUS FEATURES

'Labor Day'

2 Kate Winslet plays an unstable single mom who finds herself forcibly housing a convict on the lam (Josh Brolin). Fortunately he's not one of those dangerous cons but one who fixes up the house, makes great pies and teaches her some sweet, sweet lovin'. Jason Reitman's fifth film is adapted from a novel by Joyce Maynard, aka J.D. Salinger's ex-girlfriend.

'Tim's Vermeer'

3 Though made by Penn and Teller, this doc features very little of the magicians. Instead, the focus is on one Tim Jenison, a millionaire inventor who tries to prove a theory about how Johannes Vermeer made his paintings by painstakingly recreating one.

Oscar-nominated shorts

4 Want to get a leg up on those Oscar pools? Or just watch some films? You can watch all 10 of the titles nominated in the short animated and live action categories, including Disney's retro "Get a Horse!" that was shown before "Frozen."

ADMIT ONE

'Charlie Victor Romeo'

5 A controversial-sounding but fundamentally serious 1999 play — which recreates the final moments of crashed planes from inside the cockpit — gets a similar stripped-down screen version, whose splashiest effect is the use of 3-D to create increased intimacy between actors and audience.

'12 O'Clock Boys'

6 Invading "The Wire" territory, this documentary looks at a boy living in a dangerous part of Baltimore trying to join the titular gang of urban dirt-bike enthusiasts who cruise around the city at high speeds while eluding the police.

'At Middleton'

7 Vera Farmiga and Andy Garcia play a free spirit and a tight ass, respectively, who meet as they tour their kids around a college campus visit. Romance may or may not ensue. Talking definitely does.

'Ride Along'

8 Surely the Ice Cube circa "Straight Outta Compton" always imagined he'd be doing little else but playing cops. Here, the ex-N.W.A member decides to torture the diminutive, motormouth wannabe-officer (Kevin Hart) who wants to marry his sister.

How to watch 'Concussion'

To stream go to:
www.metro.us/streamingmovies

They haven't been nominated for any major acting awards, but that's the voters' fault for not recognizing Robin Weigert and Maggie Siff. They gave two of last year's best performances in "Concussion," a sprightly, sneaky indie you can stream on the Metro website.

A decade ago Chris Rock defended gay marriage, saying homosexuals "have the right to be as miserable as everybody else." That's what's happened to "Concussion's"

40-something hero Abby (Weigert, of "Deadwood"), who's in a stilted, sexless, suburban gay marriage with kids. After an accident, Abby makes a curious decision: By day she retires to the Manhattan apartment she's rehabbing and offers her services as a high-end prostitute.

Homosexuality is treated casually (when Abby refers to "my wife," no one bats an eye), but that's part of the sly commentary; as a lesbian, she's still treated as a mysterious other, as when a bi-curious neighbor (Siff, of "Sons of Anarchy") becomes a client.

Weigert is thrillingly anxious, coming into her own only when tending to clients. MATT PRIGGE

A new 'Echo.' Brandon Boyd still gets nervous when he puts something new into the world.

Brandon Boyd's artistic range extends beyond Incubus, the band that made him famous. He's written three books — his most recent work, "So the Echo," released in September, consists of art and writings from the past four years.

His latest non-Incubus venture is Sons of the Sea — a pop-leaning project with echoes of the Beach Boys. Even though he's a certified rock star, Sons of the Sea marks Boyd's second foray into putting out a debut album. He says he released a four-song EP last summer because of the music industry's changing nature. "I needed to put a foot in the pool before I jumped all the way in," he says.

And it's not just album formats that have changed since Incubus hit the scene: Promotional techniques are a whole new ballgame in the age of social media. When the band were getting started, Boyd says he "would draw flyers, make Kinkos copies, go home and lick stamps" to get the word out about upcoming shows.

But despite its capricious landscape, Boyd says one thing hasn't changed about the industry: the nerves that come with releasing a new project.

"There's always this feeling of vulnerability," he says. "It's this thing where you're about to show your hand to the world."

Having been in the industry for nearly 20 years, Boyd's seen many reviews of his work — good and bad. But he's learned to not let the negative ones stop him.

"I've had to develop a little more of a resilience," he says.

'Night Alive' starts out muted and then explodes

Theater. The latest from the Atlantic Theater Company will make you feel better about your life (maybe).

For a play with not one but two eruptions of violence, the overall effect of Conor McPherson's "The Night Alive," from the Atlantic Theater Company, is surprisingly muted.

In fact, it's downright bittersweet. This is both its strength and its weakness. It ambles along, offering a look into lower lives — luring you in, unassumingly, with the twisted appeal of its loser characters of varying degrees. You like this menagerie of underachievers — even care about them — but your emotional engagement is limited, despite the exquisite acting of the close-knit company.

Center stage is Tommy (Ciaran Hinds, pictured above), a 50-something almost as disheveled as the cluttered basement of his uncle's house where he lives. He scrapes by doing odd jobs, fends off his ex-wife, neglects his two kids and gets through the day with acceptance and even an approximation of contentment. Hinds hits all the right notes as the less-than-perfect anti-hero.

Tommy takes in Aimee

(Caoilfhionn Dunne), a sometimes prostitute, to hide from her abusive ex-boyfriend. Tommy's sidekick and co-worker Doc (Michael McElhatton) pops by regularly and often crashes for the night. Providing a steady stream of laughs, he makes Tommy look like Einstein. Jim Norton is Tommy's crotchety Uncle Maurice, and Brian Gleeson is chilling as Aimee's psychotic ex, Kenneth.

If "The Night Alive" is not quite compelling, it's hardly without appeal. Liberally laced with humor, its low-key ambience makes the sudden arrival of violence all the more jarring. The endearing shortcomings of this motley crew do mostly register — but not quite profoundly enough. The drama is just a little too casual for its own good.

This is a big year for Peter Pilotto and Christopher De Vos. The London-based design duo behind Peter Pilotto won the 2014 British Fashion Council/Vogue Designer Fashion Fund award on Tuesday night, and on Feb. 9th their much-anticipated collaboration for Target will hit stores, introducing their signature, bold digital prints on sophisticated silhouettes to the masses. And we're not just talking malls in the Midwest. The line is so exciting, Target partnered with Net-a-Porter to make the collection available overseas for the first time.

It's also the first time the duo has dabbled in swimwear. "We wanted to express the essence of what our brand is about — and it was so exciting for us to work in this category that we never did before," says Pilotto, who describes their aesthetic as "very vibrant, playful and energetic."

Those descriptors are perfect for a day at the beach, which seems to be the focus of the collection, or at least the party scene at Target headquarters, where appetizers were being served in colorful plastic seashells. There, Pilotto and De Vos told us about the first time they shopped at the big box retailer, plus just how to let go of our all-black habit and incorporate colorful patterns into our wardrobe.

attention that it's very flattering. A lot of pieces are also separates, so while it looks like a dress it's actually a skirt and a top that complement each other. But you can also wear [prints] broken up with solid colors. It's just important to be playful.

Have you guys ever been in a Target before?

Pilotto: Yeah, we've been once in L.A. and got flip-flops for the beach.

How would you like a women to dress for spring?

De Vos: We like the idea of classic materials like lace but with a different color than you would expect. We're always interested in materials and ways of discovering things that people know, but twisting them.

Listen up

What do you hope to gain out of this collaboration?

De Vos: The American market is very important for us. To gain visibility in America is great. It's why we put a lot of energy into this collaboration. It's the first time a lot of people will hear about our brand so it was important to show something that is very signature.

DO YOU KNOW HOW TO GO DOWNTOWN?

Using your mouth to communicate is an essential first step. / COLOURBOX

I'm a straight guy, 27 years old, and I am crazy about my girlfriend of two years. We have awesome chemistry, and for the most part, the sex is great. But she gets really uncomfortable when I go down on her, like she doesn't trust that I am having fun — which I totally am! How can I help her open up to it?

It is not a coincidence that the word "intercourse" can refer to sex as well as interpersonal communication (look it up). You mention she "gets really uncomfortable," and it's "like" she doesn't trust that you are having fun. That sounds very nonverbal.

It's time to have a talk. While speech is certainly not required to communicate every sexual desire, it could help provide a bit more clarity for you. Here are my talking tips:

Put her at ease

Be sure to explain to your girlfriend exactly why you enjoy going down on her. To reassure her that you're a bona fide Downtown Dining Enthusiast, here are sample phrases to kick-start the conversation: "I really love the way you taste because ____" or "I want to know if I am pleasing you because ____."

Up your game

Your girlfriend is only 50 percent of this equation. If you've not yet explicitly asked her about your skills, how can we be sure that she likes oral sex and just isn't cool with the way you're doing it? Don't worry, I know you're a champ, my little below-the-belt warrior. I'm just saying education is a lifelong process, and one should never stop learning.

Dig deeper

We all have egos, right? Exposing our genitals to our lovers can leave us feeling vulnerable. If you've been together for two years, that tells me you have staying power. To make this relationship even more enjoyable, plunge deeper into sexual intimacy. Talk about your needs and desires and explore sex together. It's the first step in going for gold at the clit Olympics.

Serving up Super-sized eats

Hot Chef. Eric Borgia is the executive chef at MetLife Stadium, which is hosting Sunday's big game.

For Super Bowl Sunday, Eric Borgia wants to cook like you do at home. The only difference? He has more than 80,000 fans at the table. In 2010 Borgia started as executive chef at MetLife Stadium, home of the New York Jets and New York Giants, and on Feb. 2 the stadium will house its first Super Bowl.

"A lot of the menu we created is based on what we believe people in this region would be eating in their own Super Bowl parties at home," says the chef, who is going on his 12th year working for Delaware North Companies Sportservice.

How does local fare show up on your menu?

Basically it's the flavors of the region. Things like our new hot corn beef hoagie — corn beef and pastrami — is a Manhattan staple, so we had to incorporate that into our menu. [We're also including] things like the New Jersey boardwalks, with all the seafood. Things like Junior's Cheesecake. We figured out all these iconic flavors and brands of New York and New Jersey and wanted to incorporate them.

What's the most popular dish at the stadium?

We think that the hot corn beef hoagie is going to be very popular because all of the famous New York delis. We think that our Nonna's Meatballs are very popular and we think that the Fulton Seafood Combo — attributed to the Jersey Shore — will be popular, as well our tacos. A lot of the street food is where we think people will flock.

Are people ready to be challenged on their sport foods, or do they still ask for hot dogs?

Both! I think people are definitely interested in seeing all these food types that are available and hopefully [will] try one of the new items as well as the hot dogs later in the game. People still want a hot dog. You can have the guy who spends the most

'Perfect platform'

Did you alter your menu when you found out that Seattle and Denver are playing the Super Bowl? We bet they have some food traditions, too.

They do. Being that this is the first time the Super Bowl is being held in New York, we thought it was important for them to eat like a New Yorker that day and that's what we are doing. It's the perfect platform for us to showcase the flavors of New York City.

money on the ticket or the guy who spends the least on the ticket; chances are they both want a hot dog.

You're cooking for more than 80,000 people. How do you prepare?

We wrote some of these menus over a year ago, and now we are in full production. Things like the meatballs we have already made and cooked and frozen. Even though we [do] so much preparation now, there is still a majority of the items — like all our sandwiches, anything that's on bread, all our salads, all our vegetables — that's all done day-of and day-before. We want to deliver the freshest possible product.

Chef Borgia is feeding 80,000 people on Sunday.

DELAWARE NORTH SPORTSERVICE

How many people are working in the kitchens?

Two hundred cooks; 50 of those are chefs. There are probably around 30 kitchens, but there is one main commissary and basically every one of our departments — whether it's catering, concessions, premium suites — they are all based out of the same kitchen. As we get closer to the event all these foods move up throughout the building. I mean, a 2.1 million-square-foot restaurant is what we have here.

What will your Super Bowl day look like?

To tell you the truth it's really about the day before. ... Our real work is done by that day and hopefully I get to watch a few plays.

How did you think babies were made?

Re: 'You're not metal, madam' (Metro, Jan. 28)
Letter writer Pasquale Tato claims that fetuses have "no rights to live and grow inside another person's body and feed off that person's blood." How shocking and disturbing. Does he think the fetus invaded the mother's body like a virus or vampire? Unless the woman was raped, she was a willing partner in creating that fetus. If she selfishly chose to ignore the consequences, that is her fault, not the baby's, and indeed once she created the baby, the baby does have a right to "feed off" her. She has the moral obligation to care for what she created. SHOSHANA ROSE, VIA EMAIL

Carroll at home in Seattle

Super Bowl XLVIII.

The former Jets coach enjoyed his time in the city, but isn't dwelling on his past.

But it was a short-lived ascent for Carroll, who started 6-5 with the Jets in his first NFL head coaching job in 1994 — only to finish with five straight losses and a pink slip after one season.

"To have a chance to be a head coach in New York is an extraordinary honor because of the history and the following and all that goes along with that," Carroll said.

Pete Carroll spent just one season as head coach, but also served as defensive coordinator under Bruce Coslet four seasons from 1990-93. / GETTY IMAGES

It's a tenure Carroll told the media he's not dwelling on now back in East Rutherford, N.J., for the biggest moment of his career.

"You know, I think I do a pretty good job of not doing that," Carroll said. "I don't really care about trying to figure out where we are right now, just keep moving forward. Someday we'll look back and that's when you can kind of make an assessment of what's happening."

Carroll has found the same kind of success in Seattle he had in his tenure at USC — where he was an icon after winning two national titles.

"The entire community of Seattle has embraced the Seahawks and all groups have joined in," Carroll said. "The 12th man is real."

NFL notes

While most of the football media gather in New Jersey for Super Bowl XLVIII, a few nonplayoff teams were making coaching changes under the radar Wednesday.

- The Rams fired defensive coordinator Tim Walton, according to ESPN. But the bigger news may be that they will reportedly hire Gregg Williams as his replacement. Williams found himself at the center of the Saints' bounty scandal last season. He was suspended for the 2012 season — when he was also supposed to be the Rams' defensive coordinator.

- The Cowboys shuffled Monte Kiffin out of the defensive coordinator job in favor of Rod Marinelli, though Kiffin will remain with the team. Dallas was last in total defense this season.

Manning could be in Seattle now — sort of

Super Bowl XLVIII. Pete Carroll talked about pursuing the Denver QB as a free agent in 2012, but it didn't last long.

When Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts parted ways in 2012, he quickly became the most in-demand quarterback in the league.

The Seahawks, coming off a 7-9 season with Tarvaris Jackson as their signal caller, were one of the first in line. But apparently, Manning wasn't listening.

"Well, it was brief," Carroll joked Wednesday about the pursuit to laughs from the media.

Tennessee, San Francisco and, of course, Denver quickly rose to the top of Manning's list.

"In this free agency opportunity, here's Peyton Manning. So we started the process, to make an effort, to see if there would be some kind of connection here for us," Carroll said. "Word got out and really he called me first. He knew that we were interested. He gave me a call [and] woke me up one morning. [I] jumped out of bed and [said], 'OK, let's go. What's up Peyton?' So we started talking. We talked about the basics of what it might mean for him coming to us; so the process was underway. It was very early, he had said that he didn't know what he was going to do, he didn't know where he was going to visit, he didn't know what was going to come up, but he wanted to at least hear where we stood and what our interest was."

But the process, as Carroll told it, basically ended there once Manning's agent didn't talk about a visit.

"It was very brief. It was fun for a while, with the magnitude of the player, and the background and all of that," Carroll said. "We were just going to follow through on it. We did that and it was over."

Lynch cuts media session short again

Seattle running back Marshawn Lynch gave it the old college try again on Wednesday with his media responsibilities.

One day after Lynch walked off the podium after just six minutes, he gave the media a grand total of seven minutes on Wednesday.

"I appreciate [the attention], but I just don't get it," Lynch told reporters. "I'm just here so I don't get fined."

Both media sessions were mandatory.

Lynch refused to talk to the Seattle media all season and was fined $50,000 as a result.

Head coach Pete Carroll was asked about Lynch, who literally climbed over chairs to get away from reporters and wore headphones — though not over his ears — throughout the session.

"We have obligations that we
